

When Nature Calls where will you go?

OR

Which would you rather see on your outdoor adventure?

How to Poop in the Woods:

- When possible, use existing restrooms.
(Along the Upper Kenai River, help preserve sensitive cultural sites—DO NOT dig, nor bury waste. Come prepared to pack-it-out.)
- Pack-it-out using an approved double bagging system with poo powder—a Cleanwaste Wag Bag, a RESTOP II, or a Biffy Bag.
- Elsewhere, dig your cat hole 6–8 inches deep in rich soil and at least 200 feet (70 large paces) from water, trails, and camps.
- Toilet paper—pack-it-out, along with wet wipes and hygiene items.

Why Practice Proper Methods?

- Prevent the spread of diseases.
- Avoid polluting water sources.
- Keep wildlife and pets from being attracted.
- Maximize the speed of fecal decomposition.
- Be respectful of the visitors who will follow you.
- Leave the backcountry looking better than you found it.

With 400,000 people each year enjoying the Kenai, it is critical we each take the responsibility to deal appropriately with our leavings . . .

Existing Restrooms on Upper Kenai

